

One of America's great stories is that anyone can work hard and become wealthy.

GENDER, RACE & MONEY

An interactive lecture from sociologist and award-winning storyteller, Kimberly Dark

We love tales of triumph over adversity. However, many people work hard to meet basic needs and feel as though they are somehow personally to blame for their lack of prosperity. The gap between rich and poor in the United States has been widening and this is particularly pronounced in communities of color and for women.

During this engaging and interactive lecture, Dark teaches participants about trends – both historical and current day – in the distribution of wealth in America and how those trends affect all Americans. Participants come to understand "the 1%" and how to make connections to work toward a more just economy.

REVIEWS

"Our students absolutely loved Kimberly's Dark lecture. Our audience ranged from students who had studied this issue in-depth to others who were hearing this information for the first time, and they all came away with a deeper understanding of the implications of race and gender on people's income and wealth. If your university is looking for someone who will go beyond simply explaining graphs and throwing out overwhelming statistics, then consider Dark. She makes the material real and relatable to students, and she keeps them engaged with a series of interactive activities."

- Dr. Melissa Ooten, University of Richmond

"Dark spoke on a wide range of topics, all involving social inequalities in America and how these inequalities affect job opportunities and pay. At this lecture I learned that whether it's big or small, we as individuals can make a difference. The diagrams Dark provided really helped me see how unequal things really are even though we talk like America is completely equal."
